Synopsis

"What's your first memory?"

In a dystopian future Ireland, an human-presenting android known as an 'Ellipsis' awakens with no memory of who or what they are.

Adrift in a desolate land, Ellipsis is taken in by the seemingly kind Terese, under whose watchful eye Ellipsis begins to obtain glimpses into the true nature of their reality, and the world around them.

Confronted by a treacherous world of mega-corporations and blind hyper-violent fanatics, Ellipsis strives to reclaim their identity, and their freedom from a world intent on denying them everything

Directors Statement

For me, Ellipsis is the story of fragmented people in a fragmented world.

We follow our protagonist Ellipsis as they attempt to make sense of the world they have been collapsed into. This is a place where human beings have rejected their responsibility in favour of the creation of a techno-subjugated class.

The question of what it means to be 'human' is played out through all of characters that we meet. What does it mean to enter into a contract with the world around you? What does love mean in the context of ownership? What does humanity mean in a sick and dangerous world?

The film itself plays out this notion of fragmentation in the purposeful decisions made during production: from the anamorphic dimensions of classic sci-fi, mixed with the analog elements of print media, CRT TVs and immutable architectural elements of rural and urban decay; these decisions were made to elevate the sense of displacement of the film.

The soundtrack work of Just Mustard, one of my favourite Bands right now, helps to elevate that sense of longing throughout the film, a longing for an imagined past and a lost future.

For me, this film is an honest account of identity, of loneliness and the complexity of interconnection, and of the perennial anxiety of hope in the face of an hostile world.
